Finding Justice for All

Attorney Russ Brown leads Dallas Justice, a group of local Christian attorneys focused on supporting local and international ministries, including Advocates for Community Transformation, the Akola Project and others.

Attorney Russ Brown is as passionate about local law as he is international justice.

When he isn't busy navigating complex labor and employment issues for Dallas' top executives and managing the Brown Fox law firm, he dedicates a healthy portion of his time to both local and international justice issues.

Russ leads Dallas Justice, a group of local Christian attorneys focused on supporting local and international ministries, and who regularly provide pro bono legal assistance to local citizens in need of legal representation. For his part, among other pro bono service, Russ provides legal counseling to Advocates for Community Transformation (ACT), which works to promote safety in inner-city neighborhoods by shutting down nuisance properties, including abandoned and dangerous properties used for prostitution and selling illegal drugs. He also counsels Dallas-based ALARM, which equips and trains leaders in Africa, and he serves on the advisory council for the Akola Project, which besides its work in Africa, also provides job training and positive employment to sex trafficking victims in West Dallas.

Away from the legal world, Russ concentrates on family life with his wife, Renée, newborn daughter Evelyn, young sons Luke (2nd grader at Providence Christian School) and Garrett (Pre-K at Northwest Bible), nephew Reagan (junior in high school at HP), and Bella, the Browns' shaggy 10-year old mutt.

As residents of University Park for a little over a year, the Browns have fallen in love with the community, its wonderful parks, HP sports, and their neighbors.

In his spare time, Russ loves coaching, fly fishing, and sports. Russ just finished coaching the Providence 1st grade baseball team and assisting the 1st grade Park Cities Y track team. He is also an avid sports fan and ardent supporter of the Arizona Wildcats, and of course, the Texas Rangers and Dallas Cowboys.
